The Sharp End of Pain Control

This two day course will offer participants an up-to-date insight into the role of specialist pain management in the palliative care population, including those cared for in a hospital, hospice or home environment. It will define the place of interventional procedures and new drugs appropriate to this group of patients. Teaching will include practical advice about neural blockade techniques including epidural and intrathecal catheters and cordotomy. There will be opportunity for participants to discuss patients they are currently caring for.

Who is the course for?
The course is designed for palliative physicians, pain specialists, anaesthetists, general practitioners and senior nurses who have an interest in the use of nerve blocks and other interventional techniques in the context of palliative care.

What will I learn?
The programme will comprise a number of talks and workshops including:
- mechanisms of cancer pain
- intrathecal and epidural drug delivery
- challenging pain – interactive session
- pharmacokinetics of neuraxial drugs
- other interventional pain techniques
- cordotomy
- practical session (includes intrathecal pump refill)
- case study presentations
- challenging cases – small group work.
